"In Finland, the policy makers needed to have a trusted review of our eHealth achievements and our chosen strategic approach. As a result, we decided to take advantage of the EHTEL Peer Review service. The exercise proved to be a real success and very valuable to us.

The international reviewers came from all over Europe. In their home countries, they all are well-known and active in the fields of eHealth policy, health care administration, standardisation organisations, and hospital management. The Review was carefully structured. The assessors spent two full days with us. We presented our work as well as our plans to them. The reviewers questioned and analysed our activities in a detailed but friendly way. Their final report was very detailed and clear. It offered us positive recommendations regarding possible changes, additions and improvements to our planned work.

The review gave us the opportunity to reflect on our work to date. It meant we could be positive about our investments. We could also move forward with confidence as a country with our eHealth work. As a next step from the lessons learned during the review, the Ministry initiated a national process to upgrade our eHealth strategy. This trusted, high-level review exercise is particularly useful when budgets are under scrutiny, and there are different choices for next steps on the table. The results of this 2013 review meant that we could justify our work as a result of independent testing and insights and also got new ideas on how to go forward."
